

At the AICCM National Conference 2019, we invite you to consider how we make our profession. Broadly divided into three themes – making conservation sustainable, innovative and connected – we want to know what excites you, what challenges you, and what you want to discuss further.

What treatments are inspiring you, what new project have you developed, what plans do you have for the future? Where should conservation be heading, both locally and globally, and how are we going to get there? How are we making conservation now and how can the way we make conservation shape the future?

Join us at the Pavilion at the Arts Centre, Melbourne, 13-15th November 2019 and continue the conversation.

The three day conference will include two and a half days of presentations, an afternoon of tours, a panel discussion on conservation education, welcome drinks and an evening soiree.

Each day of the conference will centre around one of the three themes:

- How are we/should we make conservation inclusive, collaborative, visible, accessible and connected across communities?

- How can the profession grow and develop?
- What do we need from conservation education and what are the challenges or opportunities we are working with?
- How can conservation respond to climate change and how will this affect our work?

- What treatments, projects, developments or ideas are exciting and inspiring you, or challenging you to do things differently?
- How can conservation shape the future?

The organising committee welcomes abstracts of 250 words on these three distinct but connected topics. Suggested formats include:

- | | |
|--|--|
| • Papers (20 minutes) | • Posters |
| • Lightning talks (5 minutes) | • Short video presentations |
| • Panel discussions (45 minutes – 1 hour) | • Tours (to be facilitated through the tour afternoon) |
| • Other facilitated discussion, debate, critique, networking or interactive sessions | |

If we have not listed your preferred session format here, contact us to discuss your idea. Abstracts and/or queries should be sent to Albertine Hamilton at secretariat@aiccm.org.au. Submissions close 1st July 2019.

