

Program advance notice

Communities and place:

understanding social and aesthetic values in heritage conservation

A one-day skills development workshop reviewing current ideas, methods and frameworks for assessing social and aesthetic values with leading heritage practitioners, Chris Johnston and Denis Byrne.

Date: Thursday 26 April 2012

Venue: Sir Roland Wilson building 120, Australian National University, Canberra

Time: 9.00 am - 5.00 pm

Cost: The event cost is $330/person or $264/student, unwaged GST included.

Details: Understanding two key heritage values - social and aesthetic – requires that heritage professionals engage with communities, using well-designed social research methods that are sensitive to each community setting. Approaches in this area have been developing rapidly and this skills development workshop will enable you to engage with current ideas, methods and frameworks, as well as learning from the experience of leading practitioners in the field. This one-day program will include both theory and practice: it will provide an overview of some of the deeper theoretical issues that ground our approaches to community-held heritage values. You will learn about specific techniques that have been used successfully to help document and assess social and aesthetic values, and ways that you can adapt these approaches to suit your heritage assessments. You will become familiar with the criteria, indicators and other frameworks used in heritage assessment processes.

Enquiries: Sandy Blair or Nicholas Hall

Email: sandy.blair@anu.edu.au
nicholas.hall@anu.edu.au

Phone: 02 6125 5887
02 6125 0595

Enrol and pay: Details of how to enroll and pay will be available soon. In the meantime, please fill out an expression of interest form on our website <http://ippha.anu.edu.au>.