

Broadbeach Burial Ground Commemoration

In 1965 soil contractors working at Broadbeach disturbed human remains. This was reported to police and the discovery was recognised as a traditional Aboriginal burial ground. The remains were excavated by archaeologist, Laila Haglund from the University of Queensland.

In 1988 the remains of over 150 people were returned to the local Aboriginal community and re-buried close to the original site.

You are invited to hear about this important aspect of Queensland Aboriginal history. Guest speaker will be Dr Laila Haglund and she will be joined by cultural heritage experts and several of the people involved in the original excavations in the 1960s and the re-burial of the remains in 1988.
