

Executive Certificate in Heritage Interpretation

The University of Technology Sydney, in collaboration with Interpretation Australia, is proud to host an exciting new course in heritage interpretation.

Interpretive practice requires knowledge of a range of fields – including heritage, history, museology, design and communication – and perspectives. This course provides an overview of heritage interpretation as well as opportunities for professional development in the areas of planning, design, exhibitions, digital media and project management. It also explores the cultural, economic and social contexts where interpretation occurs.

Who should attend? Professionals involved in Interpretation who want to expand their skill and knowledge base in order to bid for, plan and manage interpretation projects, as well as people who wish to enter the field.

Learning outcomes: Participants will gain a comprehensive overview of the multifaceted practice of heritage interpretation and enhance their skill and knowledge base.

Course Topics:

- Subject 1: Valuing Heritage: Introduction to interpretive practice
- Subject 2: Sites of Heritage: Interpretation at heritage sites, design of heritage products and working with digital media.
- Subject 3: Professional Practice: Case studies in interpretive practice

Structure: Each subject consists of a 4-day workshop. To complete the certificate participants will attend all 3 subjects (12 days in total).

Presenters:

- Paul Ashton is professor of public history. He worked in heritage for 15 years and is past President of the Professional Historians Association NSW Inc.
- Paula Hamilton is professor of history, specialising in memory, oral and digital history.
- Sue Hodges is Managing Director of SHP, a heritage-based production company, and was President of Interpretation Australia from 2010-2013.
