Milestone for the Parliament Square Project

The official opening of the Salamanca Building on 23 November 2017 marks the completion of the first stage of this landmark Hobart project. The development sits within the city block bounded by Davey Street, Murray Street and Salamanca Place, and is the result of a carefully managed process of research, public consultation and a commitment to working closely with the Tasmanian Heritage Council. The newly occupied office building is located to the rear of Parliament House, with a new glazed atrium linking the two buildings. The heritage buildings on the Parliament Square site, including the former St Mary's Hospital fronting Davey Street, have recently had their scaffolding removed to reveal the newly conserved exteriors. The Davey Street and Salamanca Place heritage buildings boast new traditional galvanised steel roofs, reconstructed chimneys and extensively repaired sandstone walls. Citta are continuing their consultation with Heritage Tasmania, as the finer details for the adaptation of the heritage buildings to a new luxury hotel are resolved. For more information on the heritage works to date, click through to the case study in the Heritage Council's Annual Report or visit the Parliament Square website. We look forward to the completion of subsequent stages of this ground-breaking development.

Say cheese! Stories of the Robinson Studio

A bay window overlooking George Street in Launceston once had an important visitor. Now home to a Launceston City Mission retail outlet, the building once saw thousands of sitters traipse upstairs to have their portrait taken. For the full story click here.
